

Sarah McCloughry

Director, ANRAH Development

Sarah has been privileged from 2002 to the present in the commercial world as well as with government departments, no-fo-profit NGOs and universities, especially the University of Oxford. Sarah trains and coaches leaders with a science and engineering background to win advancement and stakeholder engagement. Clients then have acquired recognition, position and influence as a consequence. In partnership with Oxford Uiversity's institute of Biomedical Engineering, she designed and delivered programmes for doctoral researchers in Healthcare Innovation, attracting engagement and buy-in to advance intellectual property, develop business awareness and improve conference skills. She has moreover delivered training with Oxford University Innovation, The Foundry and Begbroke Science Park with spin-out companies. She is a mentor to leaders of start-ups from OUI's Incubator Programme and has gained the coveted Royal Society of Chemistry approval for her work.

"An outstanding privilege of my career is to work with the tough, wise and intelligent people, passionate about learning leaders in higher education who participate in Oxford City Academy for Education and Development training."
